GONE AT LAST.

Death of Charles W. Lyon, of Sedalia, After a Lingerin Illness.

Died, at 9:30 p. m., December 23, 1893, at the residence of his mother, Charles W. Lyon, aged 49 years.

Mr. Lyon was well known in Sedalia, having passed the greater part of his life in this county. He was a man of many good attributes of character and charitable almost to a fault. He was a positive character and very strong in his likes and dislikes.

His health has been in a failing condition some months, but he possessed unusual vitality and only a few days ago did he take his bed.

He was a widower, his wife having died a few years ago.

He has some life insurance, the amount of which could not be learned.

Quite a number of Missouri State university cadets passed through Sedalia yesterday on their way home to spend the holidays.

A Generous Deed.

Yesterday County Treasurer Joe Hughes presented to Sanitary Officer Doty 500 pounds of flour to be distributed among the worthy poor of Sedalia. There are few bigger-hearted men in this city than Joe Hughes, and this gift is one which will bring substantial enjoyment to many a family.

The Journal's Souvenir.

The Sedalia Journal has issued a Christmas souvenir which does much credit to the paper. It is full of appropriate reading for the holidays and has been liberally patronized by the Sedalia merchants.

HENRY CLAY.

The memory of Henry Clay is still revered by multitudes of men in Missouri. Many of them, whose looks are white with the snows of old age, worked, cheered and voted for him in the heated political contests and campaigns of a half century ago. As long as virtue and genius and grand achievement are recognized on the pages of American history, the name of "the Millboy of the slashes" will remain green and glorious in the minds of the people, irrespective of party, creed or condition.

Efforts have been made by enthusiastic admirers of Mr. Clay to find for him a noble ancestry in England, but with questionable success.

He was born April 12, 1877, in Hanover county, Virginia, in a neighborhood called the "slashes." His father, John Clay, was a Baptist clergyman in that state.

The Rev. John Clay died in 1781, and there is a family tradition that while the corpse was lying in the house, Colonel Tarleton, commanding a cavalry force under Lord Cornwallis, passed through Hanover county on a raid and left a handful of gold and silver on Mrs. Clay's table as a compensation for some property taken by his troops. Mrs. Clay afterwards scornfully threw the money into the fire.

Henry Clay was the fifth of seven children, and received his early education in a small log schoolhouse, with a earthen floor. His preceptor was an Englishman named Peter Deacon.

A few years after her first husband's death Mrs. Clay married Captain Henry Watkins, of Richmond, Virginia. His son was a resident of Missouri at the outbreak of the Civil war and received a general's commission in the Confederate army.

As a youth Clay was rawboned, lank and awkward, with a countenance by no means handsome, yet not unpleasing. He made his first start in life as a clerk in the High Court of Chancery, under the celebrated George Wyeth, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall had also been students of law in Wyeth's office.

After serving four years as the great chancellor's amanuensis, he entered the office of Robert Brooke, attorney-general of Virginia, and in a year obtained license to practice. At that time Richmond had 5,000 population.

He followed his step-father and mother to Kentucky when he was but 21 years old. At that time, 1797, the population of Kentucky was 180,000, about one-fifth of whom were slaves.

Shortly after his arrival in Lexington, which was then the "seat of learning," he joined a debating society, and soon distinguished himself as a speaker, though he was greatly embarrassed in his first attempt by addressing his audience as "Gentlemen of the jury."

Mr. Clay's practice at the beginning was as a criminal lawyer, and he was the first to introduce a defense based on "temporary delirium," or emotional insanity as we call it. He never failed to clear a criminal, no matter what the odds against him.

His studies were never wide or profound, but he read up for any special occasion and always gave the impression of being a student and scholar.

Henry Clay gained his first political office in 1803 when he was elected a member of the legislature. His eloquence was such that the benches of the Senate became empty when he spoke in the House. About this time, too, he accepted a challenge to fight a duel with Joseph Hamilton Daviess, district attorney of the United States, but the meeting was prevented by friends.

Clay took his seat in the senate of the United States on December 29, 1806, when he was less than thirty years old and under the constitutional requirement, though the point was never raised against him and he was never molested on that account. In 1809-10 he was again sent to the senate to fill out an unexpired term.

He was a moving spirit in bringing about the war of 1812 and at one time President Madison seriously thought of appointing him to be commander-in-chief of the American army.

A TURKEY WALK.

A Novel Pastime as Practiced at Pilot Grove, Mo.

One of the most lively and interesting small towns within a hundred miles of Sedalia, is the thriving city of Pilot Grove, situated about thirty miles north of Sedalia in Cooper county. The citizens of this thriving city are duly devoted to business, yet they find a few spare moments to devote to pleasure, and the past week has been no exception.

This city is a very good shipping point, and numbers of fowls, both dressed and undressed, have departed from scenes so charming to adorn the tables and please the palate of "city folk."

Last Thursday the novel idea of walking for turkey took place on the principal street of the city. A peg being driven in the ground and the party to do the walking being blindfolded and given a cane. The distance to be walked was about fifty yards, and the one who came closest to the peg was declared the winner. Several turkeys were walked off in this manner, and the sport was immense.

On Friday it was decided to have a wheelbarrow contest, and at prompt time the citizens began to gather on the streets, when a peg was placed and the parties blindfolded in the same way, and the one coming nearest the peg was awarded the prize. The contestants numbered the several seasons, of the year, and the way they walked for the turkeys was a sight rarely seen. After several hours the turkeys gave out and the sport ended. It was the most laughable and enjoyable sport, and it was witnessed by many prominent ladies of the city. Surely Pilot Grove is a sporting town when it comes to having pleasure.

COL. H. W. ANTHONY.

Sketch of a Noted Versailles Attorney Who Was Known in Sedalia.

Col. H. W. Anthony was one of the oldest attorneys at Versailles and had been in active practice of the law in the courts of Central Missouri, state and federal, for a quarter of a century. He was born in Boone county, Mo., and was 60 years of age at the time of his death. He has lived in Morgan county since he was seven years of age. He was reared on a farm, and worked with his father's hands until he was some seventeen years of age, after which he taught school for about two years, and when nearly twenty years of age he went into the office as deputy under Thomas Monroe, who was clerk of the circuit and county courts of Morgan county. He remained with Mr. Monroe about two years, and then read law in the office of William H. Robinson. He was licensed to practice by the late Judge G. W. Miller. In 1853 he married Miss Susan A. Robinson, a native of Howard county, and a daughter of the late Sidney S. Robinson. Mr. and Mrs. Anthony never had any children, but have reared and educated eleven children of others. From 1856 to 1861 Mr. Anthony was a clerk in the house of representatives during the sessions of the legislature, and in the fall of the last mentioned year, he joined Gen. Pierce's command (Missouri State Guard), then encamped on Sac river, in St. Clair county. About December 22, 1861, the army moved from there to Springfield, Mo. While encamped at the last mentioned place, Mr. Anthony, at the solicitation of Colonel Applegate (aid-de-camp), was assigned a position on the staff of General Price, which he held for about a week only, when, on account of a difficulty with Adj. Gen. Brand, who was frequently intoxicated, he asked to be relieved, and went back to the ranks. After the battle of Pea Ridge, and prior to the transfer of Price's army east of the Mississippi, he returned home (his term of enlistment expiring) and remained a short time, after which he went north of the Missouri river. After experiencing many vicissitudes he came back to Versailles, February 6, 1865. To put it in his own language, he "went out in 1861 worth about $15,000, and reached home worth about 15 cents." He always took an active part in all public enterprises, and in political affairs of the state. He was elected to the office of the prosecuting attorney in 1872, to the State legislature in 1876, was a delegate to the National convention at St. Louis that nominated Tilden for president in 1876, and was a delegate to many of the state conventions of his district held since the war. He was a clear-headed, able lawyer, a good political speaker, a reliable friend and a persistent, uncompromising enemy.

Our Scoop.

From the Green Ridge Local News.

The much disputed point as to which paper got out first after Robinson's execution last Friday, is no longer one of debate. The palm of victory belongs to Brother Farr of the Green Ridge Local News.—Sedalia BAZOO.

Yes, the Local News undoubtedly scored a great scoop last Friday, but with true BAZOOIAN modesty we refrain from making any "blow" about it. However, when the fact became generally known that we intended to print the full particulars of Robinson's execution 12 hours ahead of any other paper, excitement in the village was at fever heat. Our press room was thronged with citizens eager for the first news of Pettis county's second legal hanging, and it is nothing short of a miracle that some one did not get tangled up in the cogs of the George Washington hand press and mangled beyond recognition.

BY F. E. P.

In the spring time light and airy,
When the snow begins to melt;
Came a bright and radiant fairy
Whose sweet smile with joy was felt.

But "la grippe" got down upon us,
And with pains our bones did ache,
While we sighed for early summer
That we might then cease to quake.

Summer came with sweetest flowers,
Waiting o'er her gentlest breeze;
Then "Hay Fever," with the showers,
Interspersed by robust sneezes.

Oh! for cool and crisp November,
Sighed we on each sultry day;
Wished I, well do I remember,
Sun would cease his blistering ray.

Autumn, in her glorious beauty,
Tangled heights and wooded dell,
Came respondent, as in duty,
Earth's fruition there to tell.

Oh! for snow and laughter ringing,
Jingling bells, or bright fireside,
Dances gay and music singing,
Sweetheart gay or buxom bride.

Rugged winter came in roaring,
Icy blasts with fingers bold,
Bill for coal then went up soaring,
Plumbers' figures not half told.

Aching bones and frosted fingers,
Made us wish for summer's heat,
'Tis so cold, yet how it lingers,
Freezing all with icy sleet.

FIRE AT SLATER.

Many Business Houses Destroyed and Heavy Losses Sustained.

Friday morning at 1 o'clock fire was discovered in the new Baker building on Maine street and by 3 o'clock the whole place was a mass of smouldering ruins. The three lower rooms were occupied by Phil Tucker & Sons' tailoring establishment, with stock valued at $5,500, insurance $4,000; R. P. Gwynn, grocer, stock $2,500, insurance $1,200; A. S. Gaines, men's furnishing goods, stock $3,000; E. V. Allen's drug store, stock $3,000, insurance $2,400. In the upper rooms were the offices of Drs. Edwards and Ross, Dr. F. A. Howard, Butt & Walton's millinery and George Baker's real estate office. Dr. Howard's office, including a fine library, surgical instruments, etc., was a total loss. The other parties were reasonably well insured and will suffer only small losses. The three two-story buildings were owned by Josiah Baer, jr., and cost $10,000. They were insured for $8,750. Nearly all the goods in the storerooms were taken out, but are badly damaged. The total loss on the buildings and stock will amount to about $20,000.

DEATH WATCH SET.

Banks, the Colored Murderer, to Hang on Friday Next.

A death watch has been set by Sheriff Collins, over Charles Banks, the colored murderer, who is to be hanged at Warrensburg a week from to-day, and the contract has been let for the building of the scaffold on which he is to be executed.

Notwithstanding these ominous preparations, however, the prisoner does not seem much concerned about his approaching death. He still believes Governor Stone will pardon him, and his colored friends are circulating a petition asking the governor to do so. It is not supposed, however, that the governor will interfere.
